Caring for a Foster Newborn or Infant

TUESDAY Evening, October 10th, 2017 – at the College - 6:30 to 9:30 pm

Presented by, Dr. Doug Gross, MD & Foster

Location: Woodland Community College – Building 100, Room 101

All infants need nurturing and tender care. Caregivers do best when they are prepared and supported and know what to expect about the little person being entrusted to their arms. It is important to acknowledge the differences between bringing home a birth versus a foster baby, along with the “can” and “can not’s”. For instance, that you can’t let a foster baby sleep with you or take them into your bath, and you have no legal say in medical decisions. Plus, you are faced with all sorts of pesky questions and how do you answer while maintaining confidentiality? This may be a new experience for the hospital staff and the caregiver and we want to make it just a bit easier. We will address who our babies are – what puts them “at-risk”, including prenatal exposure, and bringing them home. You will be given an overview of diapering, bottle feeding, cleaning, sleeping, and developmental milestones, plus knowing when to worry and when to relax. You will be given tips for swaddling, calming and infant massage, along with the importance of early screening and referral. Please join us for this 3-hour workshop that is strongly recommended for both experienced and not yet placed caregivers accepting newborns and infants.

Dr. Gross holds joint appointments in two departments. For the Department of Cell Biology and Human Anatomy, he teaches Gross Anatomy and Neuroanatomy to medical students and is course director for an undergraduate course in Human Anatomy. In the Department of Pediatrics, he is a practicing pediatrician at the University of California, Davis Medical Center, seeing patients in the Nursery, Urgent Care Center and Inpatient Ward.

Trauma Informed Interventions with Challenging Behavior

What is Trauma Informed Care? What is expected of those living or working with abused, neglected and abandoned children and teens – kids that have experienced trauma? During this workshop we will look in close detail what makes an experience a “trauma” and how such experiences result in symptomatic behavior that is often puzzling and challenging. We will also examine how understanding “symptom behavior” indicating previous trauma can inform the ways we respond to such behavior.

Specifically, we will cover the following:

- Four possible responses to unusual or overwhelming events, including: stress, crisis, trauma, and post-traumatic stress.
- Differences between crises and trauma
- Primary trauma from abuse and neglect
- Secondary trauma from exposure to domestic violence
- Symptoms of trauma, including memory problems, and how these cause children additional trauma
- Specific categories of trauma symptoms and they manifest in behavior
- Practice formulating responses to symptomatic behavior that exhibits and understanding of trauma and its aftermath.

Thursday Evening, October 26th, 2017

ADHD & Other Neurological Disorders in Children

Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder is a problem experienced by children and teens that was initially thought to be a “behavior problem”. This misunderstanding caused adults both at home and at school to respond to the symptomatic behavior that tended to make the symptoms worse rather than improved. Now we have a much better understanding of exactly what causes ADHD and how it affects how the brain works.

During this workshop we will discuss:

- How the brain works and is affected by various forms of abuse and neglect
- The effects on the brain of pre-natal exposure to drugs and/or alcohol
- The relationship of pre-natal exposure and ADHD
- ADHD: What is it? What are the three affected areas? What are the behavioral symptoms? Recent changes in the DSM5 diagnostic criteria.
- How does our understanding of neurological challenges inform our responses to behavior?
- Specific interventions for ADHD for both children and adults working with these challenging children.
